

In my new role as Director of Community Relations for the Bethlehem Center of Charlotte, mind I work directly with volunteers. Volunteering is a great way for job hunters to boost their skills while giving back to the community. Her ere are four ways volunteering can help your career search:

1. Free Networking Opportunities: Volunteering in your community allows you to meet new people, viagra sale including community leaders. You don't have to join a club or attend meetings. You can also volunteer on dates and at times that best fit your schedule.

2. Sharpen Old Skills and Develop New Skills: Volunteering is a perfect venue for keeping up with day-to-day office skills that are essential.

In addition, it offers new opportunities to cultivate the latest skills and abilities that can enhance your career.

3. New Awareness and New Options: Demographics are constantly changing in society and volunteering is a great way to enhance cultural awareness. Giving back to the community can also help you expand your horizons and explore new career options.

4. Give Back and Feed the Soul: The satisfaction of knowing you are doing good and being involved in your community can be both energizing and renewing. This new found energy and sense of fulfillment can also give a positive light to your job search and carry over to new career opportunities.

And will you succeed?

Yes! You will indeed!
